Is a Custom Academic Homeschool Education Good Enough?

Whether they admit it or not, this is the question that a lot of homeschool parents have been asking themselves over and over again. Then there are other questions, like...

“Should we send our child to college?”

...and let's not forget one of the touchiest subjects in the entire homeschool community:

“If we homeschool our children, will they really lack social skills like a lot of our non home school friends have told us will happen?”

Now, let me turn the tables on you. When I ask homeschool families WHY they are homeschooling their kids, I get answers like...

“We don't want their minds corrupted by the worldly influence and secular teachings of our public school system.”

“The public school system in our area is horrible.”

“We can't afford private school and even if we could, we're not so sure that the Influence our child would be exposed to is any better than the public school system.”

But by far the most common answer I get...

“We want the flexibility to be able to give our child a custom, top quality education that will better prepare them for the real world.”

Of course, there are many other answers to this question, but these responses are the most common ones that I get, and they are the same reasons that my parents homeschooled myself my younger brother.

Hi my name is Nathan Jurewicz, I'm 30 years old, I was homeschooled and thanks to 2 loving parents was able to get a high paying job at a very early age and then eventually started several successful businesses in real estate and Internet marketing and trained thousands of “full grown” entrepreneurs on how to succeed in today's recession.

What I loved about growing up in a homeschool environment was that homeschool families have a different mentality than most other families...

While most families are too busy blaming society, the education system, the economy, unemployment, the cost of higher education and college for one or several of their problems, homeschool families are taking responsibility for their children's education and their future.

This is the same mindset that I was raised to have. I would even dare to say that The homeschool community has a much larger sense of responsibility for their children than any other group on the planet!

It's important to focus our teaching efforts on real world skills so our children can go into fields that people actually need in a recession.

And this is why I'm now giving back to the homeschool community by offering you my special book entitled...

What a great little report

By Jason S

I've never bought a .99 cent book before but I'm really glad I bought this one. If you've been struggling with the question of whether or not to home school you need to read this first. Nathan has a very unique perspective having been home schooled himself. In the report he covers all the major questions that plague every aspiring or current home schooler.

4 stars Nathan and thanks for taking the time to put it all down on paper. I honestly now have a new found conviction for what my wife and I plan to do.

More parents should know this

By Amazon Customer

This has some really good insights in it. It's a fresh - and very important - perspective on our kids and their future. Most importantly, it introduces some next steps for doing something about it. Amazes me that the author is so young, but then again given what he's achieved, this is probably why it's worth listening to him.
