Lonely Planet PR > Fodor's

By John K

For anyone deciding b/w this and Fodor's I'd 100% recommend this Lonely Planet guide. It's restaurant rec's were good, and got a little more into the thick of things than Fodor's. If you're a resort traveler, Fodor's may be for you, but if you plan to be a little more rugged in your adventures, then definitely get lonely planet. So happy I ordered this one at the last minute. Wound up throwing Fodor's away while we were in PR.

no table of contents in kindle edition

By rachel

While the content is helpful and recent, the inability to navigate in any useful way renders the kindle edition almost useless. There is no table of contents or chapters so you must search or randomly advance to find content.

The paper edition, which I bought after discovering this, is much more useful as a result.

A good guide for the island

By Braden

A good guide for the island. It has great suggestions, but it would be more comprehensive. It missed a lot of the hotels and restaurants we encountered and lacks the good tips we got from friends. Everyone on the island is incredibly hospitable and friendly.

If going: October is the cheapest, but there will be rain. Bring umbrella, sunscreen, bug repellent, swim trunks/suit, anti-itch cream. October also has cheap airfare if flying from east coast. I wouldn't pay more than $350 for round trip.

Remember, it is basically just like another state in the US (Walmart, Petsmart, Walgreens, etc) -- except with better (sea)food and more Spanish, though everyone speaks English. If renting a car, everyone drives maniacally (no one uses turn signals, everyone speeds, and tail gating is a norm) - there is no parking in Old San Juan, so rent a car after leaving that town. Cab to and from air port runs about $25-30.

Sales tax is 11.5% on the island. (Maybe in an effort to help alleviate the island's ~$72 billion debt.)

It would be great to have a shoestring version of this book!
