About the Author

Dr. Kenzo Kase was born in Japan in the early 1940s. He was a sickly child, not allowed to attend physical education classes because of this physical frailty. He was plagued by pneumonia, tuberculosis, kidney infections and all kinds of allergies. His grandmother was a Japanese healer who used herbal remedies, acupuncture and moxibustion techniques, and from her he learned the value of a healing touch. Through his own experiences and training, Dr. Kase was never forced to separate different styles and methods of healing. After graduating from chiropractic college in Chicago, he was able to combine his education in both mainstream and traditional medical techniques and philosophies. His education is in chiropractic and acupuncture, but his medical knowledge is both deeper and broader. In the research field, he works with surgeons, physiotherapists and natural healers. Part of his genius is his ability to make connections between different treatment paradigms and to help each concept progress a step or two further. Today people call it Integrative Medicine, but Dr. Kase has been using this approach for years. He has seen that there is no one-size-fits all. In essence, integrative medicine is the embodiment of alternative and evidence based medicine; a school of thought that does not distinguish between the two. Instead it focuses on wellness, health, and prevention through education and an emphasis on the patient-physician relationship; as well as the treatment of the patient's mental, emotional, and physical ailments as a whole. All these considerations are equally strong in animal care. Working with a team of equine specialists, Dr. Kase has been testing Kinesio Taping concepts and applications on horses for more than fifteen years.

Many of us are seeking more natural methods to maintain both our own health and the health of our horses. Holistic Veterinary care is part of this trend. Methods such as chiropractic and acupuncture for horses have gained in popularity as they have proven effective in treating many conditions. I have been researching and testing the Kinesio Taping Method® on horses since 2004 and have found these applications to be very effective for some common medical problems in horses. Many horse owners are eager to find a therapy they can apply themselves to help keep their horse healthy and sound between veterinarian visits. In this book, the Kinesio Taping Method® is introduced and how it can help your horse recover from injury or chronic conditions. Kinesio Taping is a natural, safe and effective treatment for the horse and can be easily applied. My team and I spent a full year designing and testing a tape specifically for horses because we felt that human tape would have very different effects on a horse. Horses have very sensitive skin and hair, and actually need much less stimulation to feel something on their skin compared to a human. We designed Kinesio Equine Tape to work on the hair without over-stimulating the horse. Because of this, Kinesio Taping can be used on a horse for both immediate and long term treatments, and can be combined successfully with other modalities. Taping Applications Included: Sacroiliac Joint Taping, General Soreness in the Back, Withers Pain, General Support Taping for the Hock, Taping for Inflammation in the Hock, Inflammation of the Hock - Advanced Application, Stifle, Stifle - Advanced Application, Suspensory Ligament, Inflammation in the Hoof, Fetlock, Hip, Tight Neck.
